Total dissolved solids (TDS) are direct measure of all the dissolved, organic and inorganic particles present in water. Natural water comprises the dissolved solids mainly of inorganic salts such as carbonates, bicarbonates, chlorides, sulphates, phosphates, nitrates etc.

The concentration of TDS in groundwater depends upon much more factors such as type of strata and depth through which dissolved solid pass; temperature, topography and gradient at which water moves (residence time), the porosity and permeability of rocks through which water percolate down.

contamination of water by human and animal activities including sewage disposal and agricultural practice as well as mixing of different types of water.
